It is a common and widely-spread practice in a business email communication to differentiate signatures depending on who the sender is. Companies very often want to put different sets of contact details, images, and even layouts to indicate that the message arrives from a general mailbox like sales@ or from an individual like j.doe@.

How to set up different email signatures for shared

I've been asked by a client to come up with a more presentable way of displaying a SharePoint image gallery. And since the default way that SharePoint does that, is by no means user-friendly at all, I dug around and found some code that just needed needs a little editing in order to work in SharePoint 2013.
